Union Leaders Offer Guidance at Annual Meeting

Both the national and Texas State AFL-CIO presidents were on hand at the affiliated Maritime Trades Department's (MTD) winter meeting in San Antonio, Texas, and they gave insightful presentations on the state of labor. The MTD is a constitutionally mandated department of the AFL-CIO, and SEATU President Michael Sacco is also the president of the MTD.

AFL-CIO President Richard Trumka spoke on March 10, while Texas AFL-CIO President John Patrick welcomed those in attendance to his home state with a speech the day before.

"These are pretty challenging times, for our labor movement and for our nation," Trumka said to begin his speech.

He continued, "Pay is low, inequality is too high, good jobs are too far and few in between. But over the last four or five years, something has started to change. Working people right now are starting to speak out. Working people are starting to shape the debate. You see, we want better: We want better for our country, we want better for ourselves, and we want better for our family that's going to follow us."

A longtime ally of the SIU, Trumka also spoke about the political motivations of the AFL-CIO: "We don't work for any politician, or any political party. We're not going to be an ATM for the Democrats, and we're not going to be a rubber stamp for the Republicans. We're going to lead with our issues, we're going to lead with our values, and we'll put our members and our families first. That political independence is really our best way forward, and it'll strengthen our credibility, and it'll strengthen our effectiveness. That's how we build an America that starts to work for working people again."

Such "political independence" was a key to defeating the job-killing Trans Pacific Partnership, he said. It also proved useful in helping defeat the initial nomination for Secretary of Labor. In both cases, he emphasized, working people won because they came together in solidarity.

Specifically focusing on the new administration, Trumka said, "Good jobs and raising wages is how we're going to measure the Trump administration. President Trump promised throughout his campaign to make life better for American workers. But talk's cheap. When the president does something that's good for working people, and good for the economy, we'll say so. And we'll work for it. Conversely, when he does things that are bad for working people, and bad for the economy, that lower our wages and make our workplaces less safe, that threaten our pensions and threaten our healthcare ... we're going to step up and fight him every step of the way."

Trumka added, "And President Trump gets to choose the path. In us, he'll either have a constructive partner ... or an unrelenting, resourceful and damn tough opponent. He gets to choose."

He then turned his attention to the topic of union solidarity, saying, "Brothers and sisters, the unions of the maritime trades show us what solidarity looks like. And I want you to know that your priorities are my priorities. We're there for you. We always have been, and we always will be. Whether it's protecting the Jones Act, or getting the Export-Import Bank back up and running where it needs to be ... And to our Canadian brothers and sisters, we're going to stand with you each and every step of the way."

After talking about how unions are for fair trade deals, unlike the defeated Trans-Pacific Partnership, Trumka spoke about what unions can accomplish for workers: "We know firsthand how trade can produce good jobs and strong wages. Shipbuilders, Longshoremen, Seafarers, you name it – those are careers to be proud of. I'm a third-generation coal miner. When my grandfathers first went into the mines, mining jobs weren't good jobs. But because we stood together, because

So-Called 'Right-to-Work' Bills Defeated in NM, NH

Editor's note: This article originally appeared in a recent edition of the Press Associates Union News service.

Outspoken worker testimony and Democratic state legislators' votes combined to kill so-called right-to-work (RTW) legislation in New Mexico, at least for this year.

After an unusual Saturday session on Feb. 25 in the state House chamber in Santa Fe – moved there because of the huge crowd of workers that showed up – the House Labor and Economic Development Committee defeated RTW by a 6-5 party-line vote.

That effectively ends RTW in New Mexico for this year, since the legislature meets for only 60 days.

It also makes the New Mexico House the second consecutive state legislative body to trash RTW, despite huge business and extreme-right lobbying for it. New Hampshire's House buried RTW for the year the week before.

Prior to the New Mexico and New Hampshire RTW defeats, legislatures in Kentucky and Missouri passed RTW laws and the respective governors signed them. New Mexico GOP Gov. Susana Martinez promised to sign the RTW bill if it reached her desk.

"Take a moment to remember why so-called 'right to work' is a total scam that makes the rich richer while exploiting and endangering working Americans,"

New Mexico AFL-CIO President Jon Hendry said in asking workers to converge on the state capitol for the hearing.

Despite their name, RTW laws aim to reduce the power of workers and their unions. Such statutes outlaw any language in collective bargaining agreements mandating the union can collect dues, or even fair share fees from workers who are in the union shop, but don't want to join. Those levies, also called "agency fees," let such workers pay discounted rates, covering only bargaining and contract administration.

The New Mexico RTW bill not only barred collection of agency fees but it "would also bar employers from exercising their right to hire only union-trained and certified workers," Hendry said. "So-called 'right to work' laws are unfair, unnecessary and hurt the middle class."

As for all those workers who could use union services without paying for them under RTW, one unionist had a pointed reply. "If you don't want to pay the freight, then you shouldn't be able to take the ride," said Robert Ferguson of Machinists Local 2515 in Alamogordo, New Mexico.

MTD Winter Meetings

I recently met with labor leaders and key industry figures at the Maritime Trades Department's winter gathering in San Antonio, Texas. In case you need a refresher, the MTD signifies just one of the ways SEATU has strength beyond our numbers. When we stand with other labor organizations our voices are heard, and we can accomplish far more than we can alone.

Michael Sacco

The MTD in particular is a vital connection for us. It's a constitutionally mandated department of the AFL-CIO, and its 22 affiliated unions (including our parent organization, the SIU) represent more than five million workers. When you knock on a door as a representative voice for five million people, that door opens.

I am proud to serve as president of the MTD in addition to being your president.

During the meetings in Texas, we discussed a lot of important issues that face working families, and the whole event was a great success. While every executive board official statement we made was important, the resolution on our nation's infrastructure was a home run. The statement painted a clear picture which I'm sure most if not all union members and officials can attest is the truth.

For example, we noted that the problems with our infrastructure are obvious with every tire blow-out caused by a pothole, with each child coming home from school ill due to a heating or air conditioning breakdown, with every late arrival to work because a subway track is cracked, with every food item thrown away thanks to an electrical grid failure.

Our unions have the men and women ready to go to work, trained through joint labor-management apprenticeship programs so they know what is required and how to perform safely and efficiently. All we ask is that our work be rewarded at the scale that is required for quality craftsmanship, through prevailing wages with decent benefits like health care and retirement.

We could go on and on creating an infrastructure equivalent of the old bubble-gum card checklist. But stating the obvious hasn't gotten the job done. We need to continue making our case heard, on this and all other issues that we feel strongly about. Whether it's creating good-paying jobs or protecting the rights of workers, we stand with our union brothers and sisters in solidarity - past, present and future.

On a related note, one of the best avenues we in the labor industry have to explain our positions are meetings with congressmen and senators and their staffs, such as the maritime industry's annual Congressional "Sail-In." SEATU executives, along with more than 100 other labor and industry leaders, recently met with several dozen members of Congress and their staffs to talk about issues that matter to American workers.

There are a lot of benefits to getting face-to-face meetings with legislators, even in the age of FaceTime. When we get the opportunity to press the flesh and discuss the threats that face America's working families, it makes all the difference. From incoming freshmen Representatives, up to the most senior leaders in the Senate, they will remember meeting with us when a bill needs votes.

It goes without saying that these meetings can't happen without continuous political activity, and that activity costs money. It's not ideal, but that's partly how you get a foot in the door (financial backing of pro-worker candidates during campaign season). And we can't keep going to bat for labor rights without your support, including voluntary donations to the SEATU PAC. Every little bit helps, and your money goes to the issues you care about: creating good-paying jobs that help support SEATU families.

The MTD meeting and the Sail-In set a good tone as we head into the next quarter. I'm excited to keep pushing ahead with a pro-worker agenda that promotes workers' rights and expands opportunities for people to experience the American Dream.

Labor Unions Map Plans for Success

workers united and got a voice on the job, we made those good-paying jobs."

Trumka also described the qualities of a good union leader, saying, "We have to be willing to put something on the line for one another. Not just standing in solidarity when the sun's shining, and it's easy, and it might not cost me anything, but standing with my brothers and sisters when it may cost me something.... Because I know that when you get weak, I get weak. When you get stronger, I get stronger."

He then discussed activism in detail, describing past and present actions taken by union leaders and members alike, as well as the importance of standing together when outside influences try to divide unions.

"America wants more of that activism," Trumka said. "You can see that they're hungry for it. By a margin of two to one, registered voters want to increase Social Security benefits, not decrease them. By a margin of three to one, folks want to tax companies on overseas profits, and increase funding for public schools. People overwhelmingly support higher wages and more investment in infrastructure. And a growing number believe in unions: Over 60 percent of the American public says unions are important, needed and should be stronger."

"And the best news of all? That number is even higher among young people coming into the

John Patrick
Texas AFL-CIO President

workforce right now," he continued. "That's our future, that's good news."

The day before, John Patrick detailed the state of the labor movement in Texas. "Most of what the Texas state AFL-CIO does at the state legislature goes well beyond the concerns of any one union. More often than not, it involves all working people in the state," he explained.

"We seek nothing more, and will accept nothing less, than a fair shot for all working Texans - whether they hold a union card or not," Patrick said. "The Texas AFL-CIO is strongly supporting bills to raise the state minimum wage, secure equal pay for women, to improve workplace safety, and otherwise help all Texas workers. You want to know where we stand on most any piece of legislation, the first question we ask is whether the bill will help all working families in the state."

He further outlined where the Texas AFL-CIO stands on multiple legislative issues, before stressing that the current political climate in Texas is difficult for the labor movement: "The job for those that believe in progress for working people has never been tougher than it is right now in the state of Texas."

Patrick also mentioned a state senate bill, targeting union members, that is garnering attention all the way up to the governor's office. "Once again this session, we are a target," he said. "Senate Bill 13, authored by Senator Joan Huffman of Houston, takes direct aim at public sector workers, who now make up the majority of our membership at the Texas AFL-CIO. Senate Bill 13 would take away the freedom of public employees who voluntarily sign union membership cards to deduct union dues from their own paychecks through payroll reduction. Let me put that in plainer terms: Teachers, nurses, correctional officers and a host of other public servants should be free to do as they please with their own paychecks."

He then spoke about other bills introduced in the state legislature that threaten to reduce worker protections and worker freedoms that stem the union way of life. While some have a greater chance of passing than others, he vowed to fight those bills, and all other bills with similar intents that follow.

Argosy Casino and Hotel Holds Icon Awards for Members

Every year, the Argosy Hotel and Casino in Riverside, Missouri, holds an awards ceremony just for employees. Called the Icon Awards, they are presented to exemplary employees, many of whom are SEATU members, during a banquet for recipients and guests.

In additon to the numerous awards, one member is named the overall Icon Award winner each year. This year's honor went to Artice Cann, a SEATU member and EVS employee for 18 years. In addition to the title, she was also awarded $1,000 and a parking space by the door.

Members Graduate From Classes At SEATU-Affiliated Paul Hall Center

Editor's note: Many classes of SEATU members employed by Norwegian Cruise Lines (NCL) have recently completed the Basic Safety Training course at the Paul Hall Center for Maritime Training and Education in Piney Point, Maryland. The two-week training courses begin with a week of "Norwegian" training, as specified by the vessel operator, followed by a week of fire, survival and first aid training. These training sessions were all administered at the Joseph Sacco Fire Fighting and Safety School, located on a satellite campus. With an average class size of 18 students, over 1,800 SEATU members have completed their training since March 2014! Following are class photos from some of the most recent classes.

ITF President Visits Pride of America

Recently, the President of the International Transport Workers' Federation Paddy Crumlin paid a visit to the SEATU-crewed Pride of America in Honolulu, Hawaii. "Great day," Crumlin said, before praising Port Agent Hazel Galbiso. "The whole crew loves Hazel, and quite a few of them have worked with her, including one of the captains. She's amazing!"

Crumlin was given a tour of the vessel, and met many SEATU and SIU members hard at work on the Hawaii-based cruise ship. The ship, operated by Norwegian Cruise Line, is the only U.S.-flag deep sea cruise ship. It offers inter-island cruises to Hawaii's four main islands.

Delegates Needed

Delegates are needed at workplaces in all SEATU jurisdictions. Contact your local union hall for more information.

Know Your Weingarten Rights

All SEATU members should be aware of their Weingarten Rights.

Established by the Supreme Court in 1975, the rights guarantee employees the right to union representation during investigatory interviews with management. An investigatory interview is one in which a supervisor questions an employee to obtain information which could be used as a basis for discipline or asks an employee to defend his/her conduct.

If an employee has a reasonable belief that discipline or discharge may result from what they say during such an interview, they have the right to request union representation. It's important to remember that management is not required to inform employees of their Weingarten rights; employees have the responsibility of knowing that these rights exist and to request that they be invoked when appropriate.

Copies of the Weingarten Rights are posted on all union bulletin boards. They also can be accessed on SEATU's web site at www.seatu.org, linked under the Members Rights section. Individuals with questions regarding these rights should contact their SEATU representative, delegate or shop steward.

Become Familiar With Your Labor Contract

All SEATU members, especially those in bargaining unit classifications, are reminded to obtain, read and become familiar with the provisions of their labor contracts.

It is equally important to be aware of the company's policies and procedures where labor issues are concerned. Knowledge of both better enables members to invoke their rights as necessary and protect them when threatened.

Those desiring copies of their labor contracts should contact their on-site delegate or visit their union hall.

Support Your Newsletter

All members are encouraged to share their ideas for stories and photos with the editorial staff of The Entertainer. Become the eyes and ears in your work areas by staying abreast of newsworthy events such as promotions, awards, retirements, participation in community activities, etc.

The Entertainer staff would also like to know about anyone who has or participates in unusual hobbies for possible feature stories.

Contact your union representatives with any tips you may have so that we can give recognition to those who richly deserve it.
